night. He invited two couples beside Kalman Juan. This latter was ther as a special guest. Sal. it is said, had sent a messenger after Juan when I was feared he would not be present There was wine and moonshine and stuffed pig. Music and love-making face in the night, Sal flushed with liquor resented the too great familiartry paid his wife by Juan. But he blamed his wife-not Juan, according to the story told police.

In the midst of a dance and while luan waitzed the fair Mrs. Sal about floor, the husband slipped away to his room. When he returned a nic ale plated revolver by in the paim of

As the couple swirled about the room before him, Sal standing in the doorway, taking aim, fired neross the room. He shot only once. As the report of the pistol drowned out appeal ing notes of the ayuphone. Juan drop ped to the floor. He continued to cline to Mrs. Sal who uttered a scream and fell senseless across his body.

Sal, it is said, cursed his pomarksmanship. He had almed at he wife, he says. He meant to kill her For more than half an hour Sal and his guests wandered about the room, too stupeded by the sudden turn t events to know what to do. In the meantime Juan, shot through the stomsell, tay bleeding to death on the floor
